ICT Program on

“AUTODOCK”

Introduction:

Docking is an alternative approach for the tracking and planning of potential drugs before they are further tested in animals. The best approach is to predict the energetically favorable ligand conformations of ligands in the active site cavity of a particular receptor.

Objectives:

To make the students aware about Drug binding in different poses

The main objective of molecular docking is to attain ligand-receptor complex with optimized conformation and with the intention of possessing less binding free energy.

- Participants : Faculty, M.Pharmacy and IV B. Pharmacy Students

Summary:

ICT program was organized on introduction of docking software. Docking allows for the rapid screening of databases of approved drugs, natural products, or already synthesized compounds against one or more biological targets of interest. Mrs. M. Suchitra explained various molecular modeling techniques. The workshop focused on the basics of computational chemistry and auto-docking techniques. The Auto Dock workshop for students was well-received, focusing on enhancing skills in molecular docking. Participants engaged actively in hands-on sessions, learning to simulate molecular interactions effectively. Feedback highlighted the workshop's practical relevance and the clarity of instructional content.

Overall, the workshop successfully equipped attendees with fundamental docking software skills, fostering enthusiasm for future applications in pharmaceutical research. Participants, both students and faculty, thought the platform was great for helping them understand the importance docking studies. The receptor ligand interactions were highlighted by the speaker. The participants' use of the self-assessment questionnaire was helpful in assessing themselves. The audience actively engaged with the speaker and made good use of the session to get their questions answered.
